Mr. Robert Leder Principal

"The excellence of knowledge is, that wisdom gives."
Ecclesiastes, Chap. 7 Verse 12

ON EXCELLENCE: A PARABLE

An old philosopher slept under a tree cloaked in a fine silk robe. He was awakened by a Prince accompanied by his young servant. "That is a fine robe you have there old man" said the Prince; "it would rest well on my royal shoulders." The philosopher replied "I will give my robe to the person who can answer this question: 'What is excellence?'"

The Prince remained deep in thought for a long while. Finally, he gave this response: "Excellence is when a number of people attempt the same task and one person performs better than all the rest. Excellence is proving that you are superior to others."

The old man looked sadly disappointed. "But how can this be?" he said. "In asserting our superiority over others, we diminish the stature of our fellow man and this is harmful. Excellence cannot be a destructive things."

Just then, the Prince's poor young servant spoke up: "Sir, excellence is very much like that tree you are sitting under. Every day it is a bit taller than it was the day before. Each day it gives more fruit than it gave the day before. Excellence is growth — and we gain excellence not in surpassing others, but only in surpassing ourselves."

The old man removed his robe and placed it on the young boy's shoulders. "Wear your garment proudly" he said, "for you have been found worthy where a Prince was found wanting."

John Lennon

A magical, musical legend Yanked from our grasp and can tell no new rhythmic tales to our anticipating ears Imagine he is still alive — It's easy if you try His music, his words, still filling The cruel, cruel world with hope He was in essence the sun, melting an icy world.
He was in truth a dream in a world of nightmares His soul shall materialize for us all when we hear the songs he once wrote, his immortal music John was a legend
A magical, musical triumph has been lost

Lennon —
such a brilliant composer!
Imagine the beauty of living to sing Searching endlessly for lyrics to make us sense our innermost needs It is true death is his saddest song

To My Friend

Though we were once close and couldn't be separated, we've accomplished just that and have done it for ourselves

We played ball and sold lemonade Now I see you only by chance when I'm walking the dog or going to visit my grandmother

You were the strong one when it came to fighting and fooling around, I was the quiet one who was envious of your strength

I am not alone — but I miss your company Your way of brightening up a day Life didn't force our parting, our own values did it for us

We play for the same softball team, but are among strangers and can't relate You are a showman on and off the field Something I will never be — but I am just as good

Your disco clothes make you louder
But that doesn't make me want to wear them You stay with smaller kids who look to you as a regal being The same as I unconsciously looked toward

When college begins, we might never Share the times again But when I get married, you're still My best man — my best friend

Anthony DiGirolamo

Did you ever wonder where it all begins
Is it scientific phenomena Or just mortal sin?

Straighten your tie Behind you, please close the door
We do all of this But who is it for?

Is there death after life?
Is there life after death?
Is it ordinary wind
Or eternal breath?

The answer is easy Finding it is the trick
The candle does not burn
But only the wick

Kim McElveen

David Almodovar

Super-Dreamer

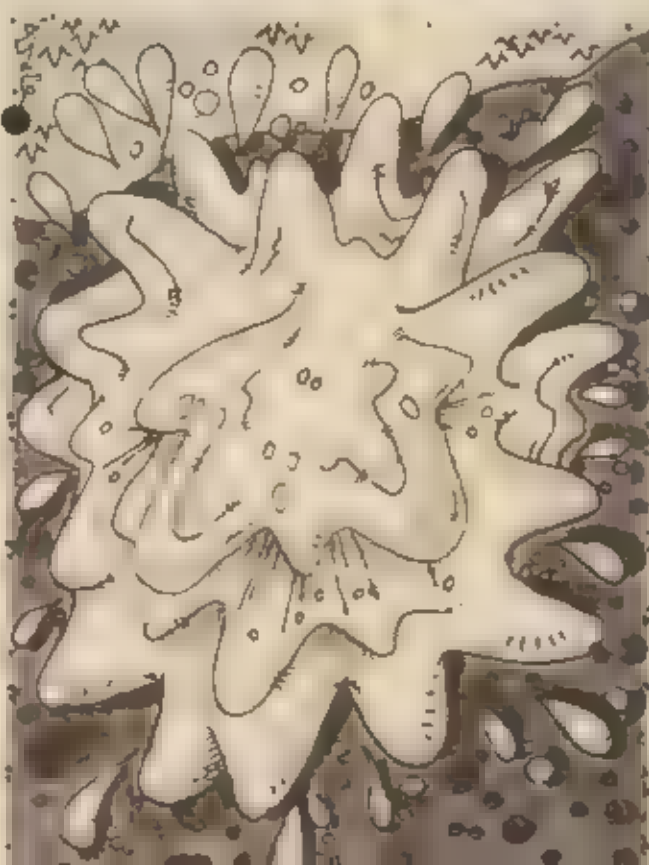

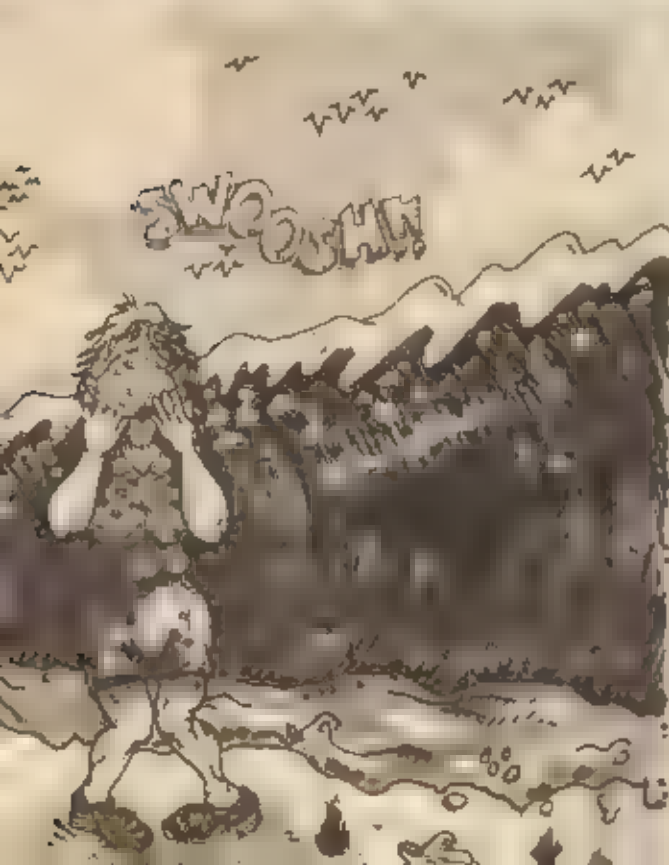

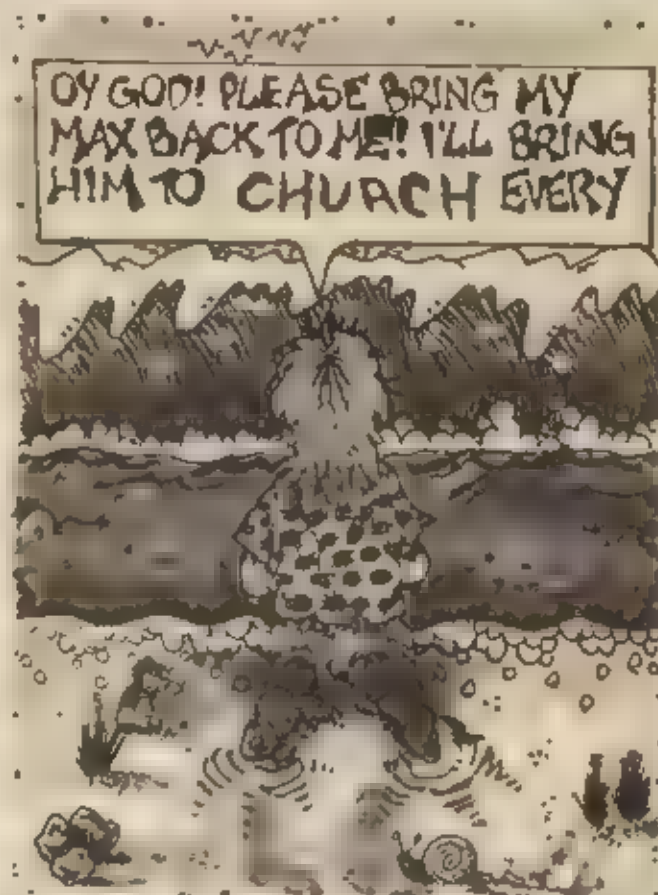

I am a cottony white cloud in an azure sky
I am a violet flower on a bed of greenest grass
I fly with the wind as a stallion on the beach
I change shape and become my heart's desire I have many faces but one mind, many roads but one path, many ideas but one lone conclusion My home is the ancient Mt Olympus in Greece I live in a castle in England, a chateau in France
There is peace and tranquility wherever I go The stones on my house talk to the trees, compelling them to grow The gates and moats are at stiff attention, to the fog that surrounds them Life here is grand!
Einstein taught me scientific ways While Sophocles showed me the way of expression Euclid helped my mathematic mind to develop But Freud enables me to understand your thoughts I dance on notes of blissfulness, as Bach plays my sonnets Pierre Cardin comes out to play, as my jeans flare with regal grace, I sailed the high seas with Jean La Fitte I rode beside Paul Revere and his Minute Men, for a second
I batted clean-up at the '78 World Series, but we won anyway.
The world I live in fights no wars Russia and China call for tea, as Britain brings the crumpets, of course The Americans march with a flag so proud, respect becomes an international vow No need for money where I go
The greatest treasures are found within one's self Hungry for love, peace, and honor, overcomes the old ache for power A perfect society nowhere else could you find But within the deepest bend of my mind

Lisa Mazzullo

too distraught to accept affection or beauty.

searching for reason to breathe.
She is confused, lost in a maze of obscure knowledge.
Acknowledging the Demon she keeps on running to nowhere

View From My Bedroom Window

The air was crisp and sterile and a symphony of miniature larks stood atop a rusty iron fence and cooed eloquently, wistfully for their Sunday supper. Baskets of clouds culminated in a puffy linen white pile, then traversed elegantly across a placid lavender sky, making it look like an enormous immaculate handkerchief.

A gentle breeze lingered and caressed a love-starved tree, which stretched its eager limbs and received its loving gesture. Then suddenly a fierce envious wind stormed by, causing drenched garments to wave frantically for peace, while an array of clothes pins in their khaki uniforms stood at attention and kept a close watch.

As a passive sun subsided behind tall beige brick dwellings, a serene, celestial bliss hovered in the air.

Birds quivered their inquisitive beaks for food and frolic, and bickered about their places on a defenseless tree while the sun hid behind the accumulating clouds to avoid the contention.

Maxine Lewis

And this is how I view my home. I have heard its many sounds and have observed it from its inner shell, yet now I experience it only through an old memory, a vivid remembrance of sadness, aged and distant in my mind, like worn clothes kept aside the locked trunk of brass and iron. I hold the key to the trunk in my hand, the presence of the old, warm feeling in my heart. And I feel the love, the old love, bright as day, and glowing like stars, shining in my night. A small flame burns deep inside under the sadness of my memory, and the love still warm and tender. I turn at the key with anticipating hands, then instantly an illusion of happiness, an illusion distant but fresh and filled with pleasant thoughts of yesterday, of beautiful people, enters into my frightened mind — the lovely memory of my home in my heart. This I will always remember. It was soft and tender, like a kiss, like an unbroken promise of undying love.

Lorraine Hall

I Remember

I remember how it feels to relax, to lie supine on a warm summer's night underneath the twinkling stars with the moon's beam streaming down on my face, the thick green grass cushioning my weary limbs, a warm breeze softly blowing, the tree's rustling leaves, as my body succumbs to fatigue, ready to sink into a deep, deep, sleep.

I remember how it feels to get out of fresh water, my drenched hair releasing tiny droplets that roll down onto my moist face and slide down my neck, the slight tremor of my body when the open air and the water on my skin unite, making me turn and plunge back into the stream.

I remember a beautiful scene: the horizon with all its splendor and magnificence, ocean waves, mighty and furious, crashing down on the coastal rocks, then arriving calmly on the shore, the sun, that luminous ball of life, shining brightly above the earth and sea, slowly descending, joining, blending with the other elements until they are gloriously one.

I remember my favorite piece of music: quietly sitting, listening to the melody, feeling the mellow serenade rush within me, absorbing the words and chanting them aloud: dancing, spinning, leaping and singing, performing my own musicals.

I remember laughing, the physical pleasure of feeling joy, smiling, glowing, laughing out loud, laughing until it hurts, pure amusement, delight, content, simply enchanted with life.

I remember soft hair: lock after of silken curls, falling smoothly in my hands.

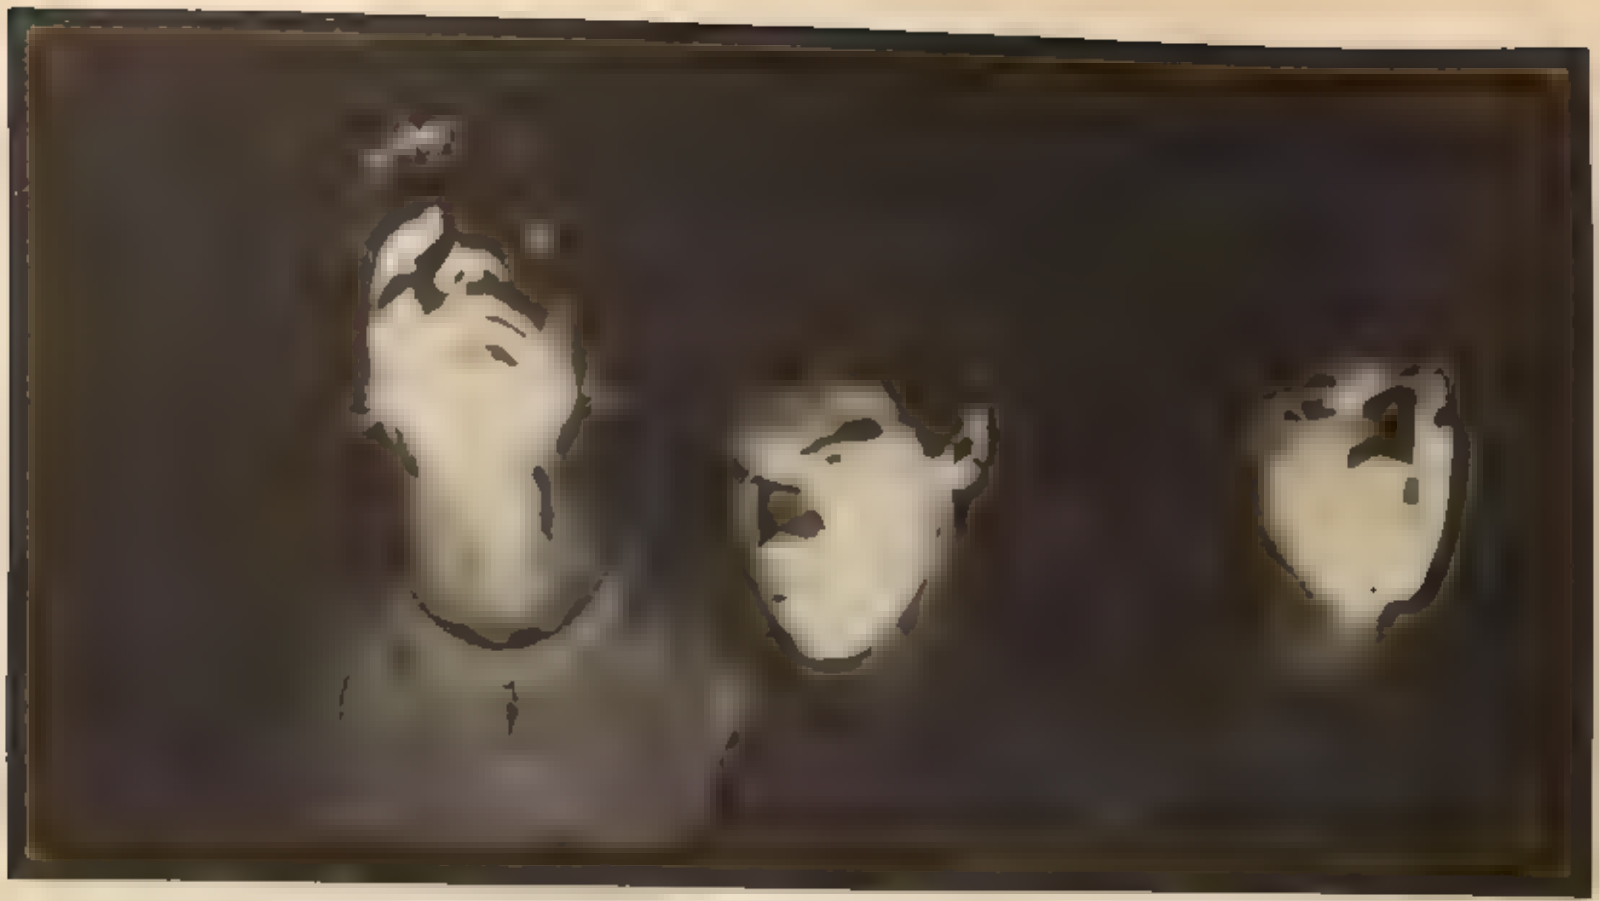

I remember a tender kiss: soft, moist lips pressing gently on mine.

I am suddenly overwhelmed with joy, blissfully happy.

I feel loved, needed and wanted.

Roselyn Rodriguez

Why was I so frightened to touch his hand?
Why couldn't I find the receiver when I longed to hear his voice?
Why couldn't I hug him just because he was there?
Why couldn't I cry before him when my eyes drowned in their own fiery liquid?
Why couldn't I share myself?
So what if he knows I care?
The vulnerability will help me It will carry us through the gates of where we both should stand If I delve inside my trembling body and pull out the tears, passions and trepidations If I hand these to him unabounded With honesty and a deep rooted sense of who we both are He'll feel He'll feel my naivete for all that I know is inevitable in the long run Only to chew a nail at every ring
As the ringing was replaced by a deep resonant "hello" His voice perplexed me and shoved my courageous thoughts back into their dark, secure, surroundings To awaken to the realization of a monotone buzz

Arise

Burning,

You felt from the sky enveloped in flames so rise from your ashes, like a phoenix, anew

Rise, rise

you have the power eternal you could hold the sun if you wished it true.

Fly, fly

you can do so much more for within you is the spirit and it lives in you.

Reach out and grasp the whole — for the mystery is yours yours is the question, yours is the answer and yours is the key to unlock the door.

Just for a moment rise above all

And once you are there you can never fall.

Tread the earth enter the oceans feel the wind in your hair,

Cleansed with water baptized in fire

rise, rise, if you dare

There is no limit — endless, boundless eternity is yours

Let it enter through your pores

Let your mind fall into you cradle it in flowers expand your conscience out from you absorb the universes power

Rise, rise
you endless child
You are free, you are free you are wild

I Never Really Knew Heaven

I never really knew heaven;
When you consider it — depressing, but true
I used to think it was expensive dinners, Clothes that shimmered, shone and showed,
Headlights that could be seen way before taillights, Satin sheets in any color, Champagne toasts all night Then you came along —
And it didn't matter that every hair was in place.
In fact you liked it better a little messy.
It didn't matter that the sweatshirt didn't match the sneakers, Two articles of clothing that would have never dreamed of Turning up in my closet It didn't matter that I had forgotten part of the William Tell Overture
It didn't matter that the nectar from the fruits we shared Ran down my chin, in fact you enjoyed kissing it away
It didn't matter that the last note I sang was off key According to you, I could have opened at the Met I just want to thank you.
Things no longer need to be dunked in Superficiality before I taste them.
Thanks again for showing me my purpose, for introducing me to heaven, for introducing me to me

Desiree Ayala

Testing

My fingers move
 But not with the flawless grace
 They had two hours before My eyes are fixed on the carbon copy
 In front of me
 But my brain wanders away
 For a moment or two Trying to comprehend the vaudily of this test
 Is my know edge so vague That my eyes squint in the deepest concentration Or am I a pompous gen us Rebeling against your Preachings

Maxine Lewis

Photography By David Almodovar

The relationship had metamorphosed into subtler shades since the days we went for picnic lunches in the middle of a work day Now we rarely communicate, but when we do find time to sit and share a steaming cup of Swiss Mocha it is as though our lives had never connected It is frightening to feel we had long been deluding ourselves, daring to deny the failure of a love We are programmed in pairs throughout our existence Then I met someone who didn't judge, who was willing to give freely without expecting pints of blood in return For you I wanted the world instantaneously wrapped in a neat little bundle with silver and gold trimming

Were our lives mapped out?
You, making deals behind your corporate desk,
I, struggling to type an unprecedented sentence Now, a few grey hairs later I call you You with your Jack LaLanne membership card expired I, with my passion for chocolate chip ice cream — beginning to show,
You with your incessant fixation for busty women
I with my bust developer,
You with your life,
I with mine
How did our lives come to be so different?
Were they ever that much alike?
We parted with regrets yet at the same time tasting the relief knowing that we were over the love but the love was not over

In memory of Richard Sanders "Doc" Assistant Principal Physical Education

Richard "Doc" Sanders

Lehman High School lost a friend in the untimely death of Richard "Doc" Sanders on Sunday September 7, 1980, just one day before the start of the new term. Even as he lay in the hospital in his last days, he was concerned with what was going on in Lehman. He called school two days before he died, to find out how the hospitalized parent of one of the teachers was doing. That's a friend.

On this summer vacation, though feeling ill, he fulfilled his military obligation for two weeks in August, as a Lieutenant Colonel in the Army Reserve College in Pennsylvania. Mr. Sanders reputation for motivating learning was wide spread. He was requested by various military schools to demonstrate his teaching techniques, and methodology. He loved teaching, and he loved his students.

Why was Mr. Sanders twice honored as PSAL coach of the year when he coached basketball at Brandeis High School? Simple! He was a masterful teacher and he demanded very high standard. He stressed being prepared and brought excitement and enthusiasm into the classroom that was catching

Mr. Sanders was very proud of Lehman. He demonstrated his pride and loyalty to Lehman in many ways. He attended countless extracurricular activities, games, shows, musicales, concerts and was Lehman's #1 cheerleader and fan. He was happy whenever his coaches had a victory and consoled the players after a rough game. He shared the pride of the teams who won championships and medals. When Lehman won, he wore the greatest medal of all, his smile.

Much more could be said about the man who entered the lives of everyone here at Lehman, but for now let us pray that his spirit will continue to pervade the halls of our school. Perhaps when you think you've heard someone say, "Set to class", or "Whose covering the locker room", or "Why don't you take up jogging", or "Go get 'em tiger!", you'll raise your fingers to your brow in a salute, and say, "O.K. Doc"

Elizabeth Grace O'Brien
1963-1981

Friends we are, friends we'll be Friends forever, you and me

I still have that saying Lizzie wrote it in my 8th grade graduation book. Friends forever — neither of us knew that her forever would only be four short years. But in those four years, Lizzie lived more than any of us will live in our entire lives. She was happy, bubbly, friendly — all a person could ask for. She had the very life that everyone wanted to have

Though she is gone from this world, this earth, the memories and smiles she left behind will never be forgotten. We all loved her very much. Those who knew her gained many things. Those who did not can only hope to meet someone that will spread as much joy, fun and happiness as Elizabeth did

1980-1981 was a year of change and growth for Lehman High School and for many of its students. We were dazzled in the field of drama, we were charmed with musicals, we were enriched with art, we were made proud by our teams' victories, and still we found time to welcome a new principal, who has proven to be a great asset to our school.

The graduating class of Lehman is proud and thankful to have received a meaningful education. We are confident that our teachers have properly prepared us for future challenges. We have been fortunate in cultivating strong and lasting friendships with many special people.

As graduates of Lehman, we will look back on our high school days as a time of learning and maturing as well as a period of carefree youth. We are departing not quite as young as when we began. We have gained the experience and skills to enable us to enter the world with a sense of pride in our accomplishments and with the spirit to make a worthwhile contribution in life.

It is due to Lehman's inculcation of positive feelings and its dedicated staff that we the graduates feel confident enough to make an ambitious statement to the years to come!
